Case Summary

The new name Salamander Creek is proposed for an unnamed 1.25-mile-long tributary of Mill Creek near McKinleyville in Humboldt County.

The proponent owns property through which the stream flows, and states that he wishes to “pay homage to the Pacific Coastal Giant Salamander . . . [which are] native to the region [and] are often found in the cool clear waters of the creek.”

In researching the proposal, it was discovered that in the fall of 2022, California Water Boards sent the proponent two Notices of Violation for “recent tree and stump clearing and grading, without permits, and in a manner that threatens water quality,” including deterioration of amphibian habitat along the stream. The first notice noted that a large mound on the property “was recently constructed reportedly to build a largescale mound feature in the shape of a salamander.”

When asked to address the issue, the proponent clarified that he assumed he was in compliance with the State’s new (effective January 1, 2023) fire suppression regulations, which require that superfluous flammable material and debris be removed from around homes. He believed that clearing the property would be an appropriate way to address that need. With regard to the use of the disposed material, he referred to:

The individual spiritual significance of the Salamander effigy mound and other land art features at Salamander Ranch.

[We are] descendants of people indigenous to North America, [whose] culture has emphasized harmony with nature, endurance of suffering, respect, and non-interference toward others. During the Summer of 2022, [we] experienced a spiritual moment during deep meditative prayer at the site of the Salamander effigy mound. During this religious experience, a Salamander Spirit Guide came to [the proponent] and presented a vision of a mound rising from the Earth in the shape of a Salamander, emerging from the creek. The Salamander is a native species to the parcel.

The Spirit Guide presented a vision that this [mound] would one day be a place where spiritual rituals such as prayer circles, rites of passage such as celebrations of birth, funeral ceremonies, celebrations of harvest and unions of holy matrimony and other spiritual ceremonies would take place there.

The proponent proceeded to create the effigy mound, adding:

On several occurrences during site visits, investigators from county, state, and federal agencies have openly verbally mocked, belittled, and openly disregarded any religious and spiritual significance when explaining to investigators the creation of the Salamander effigy mound.

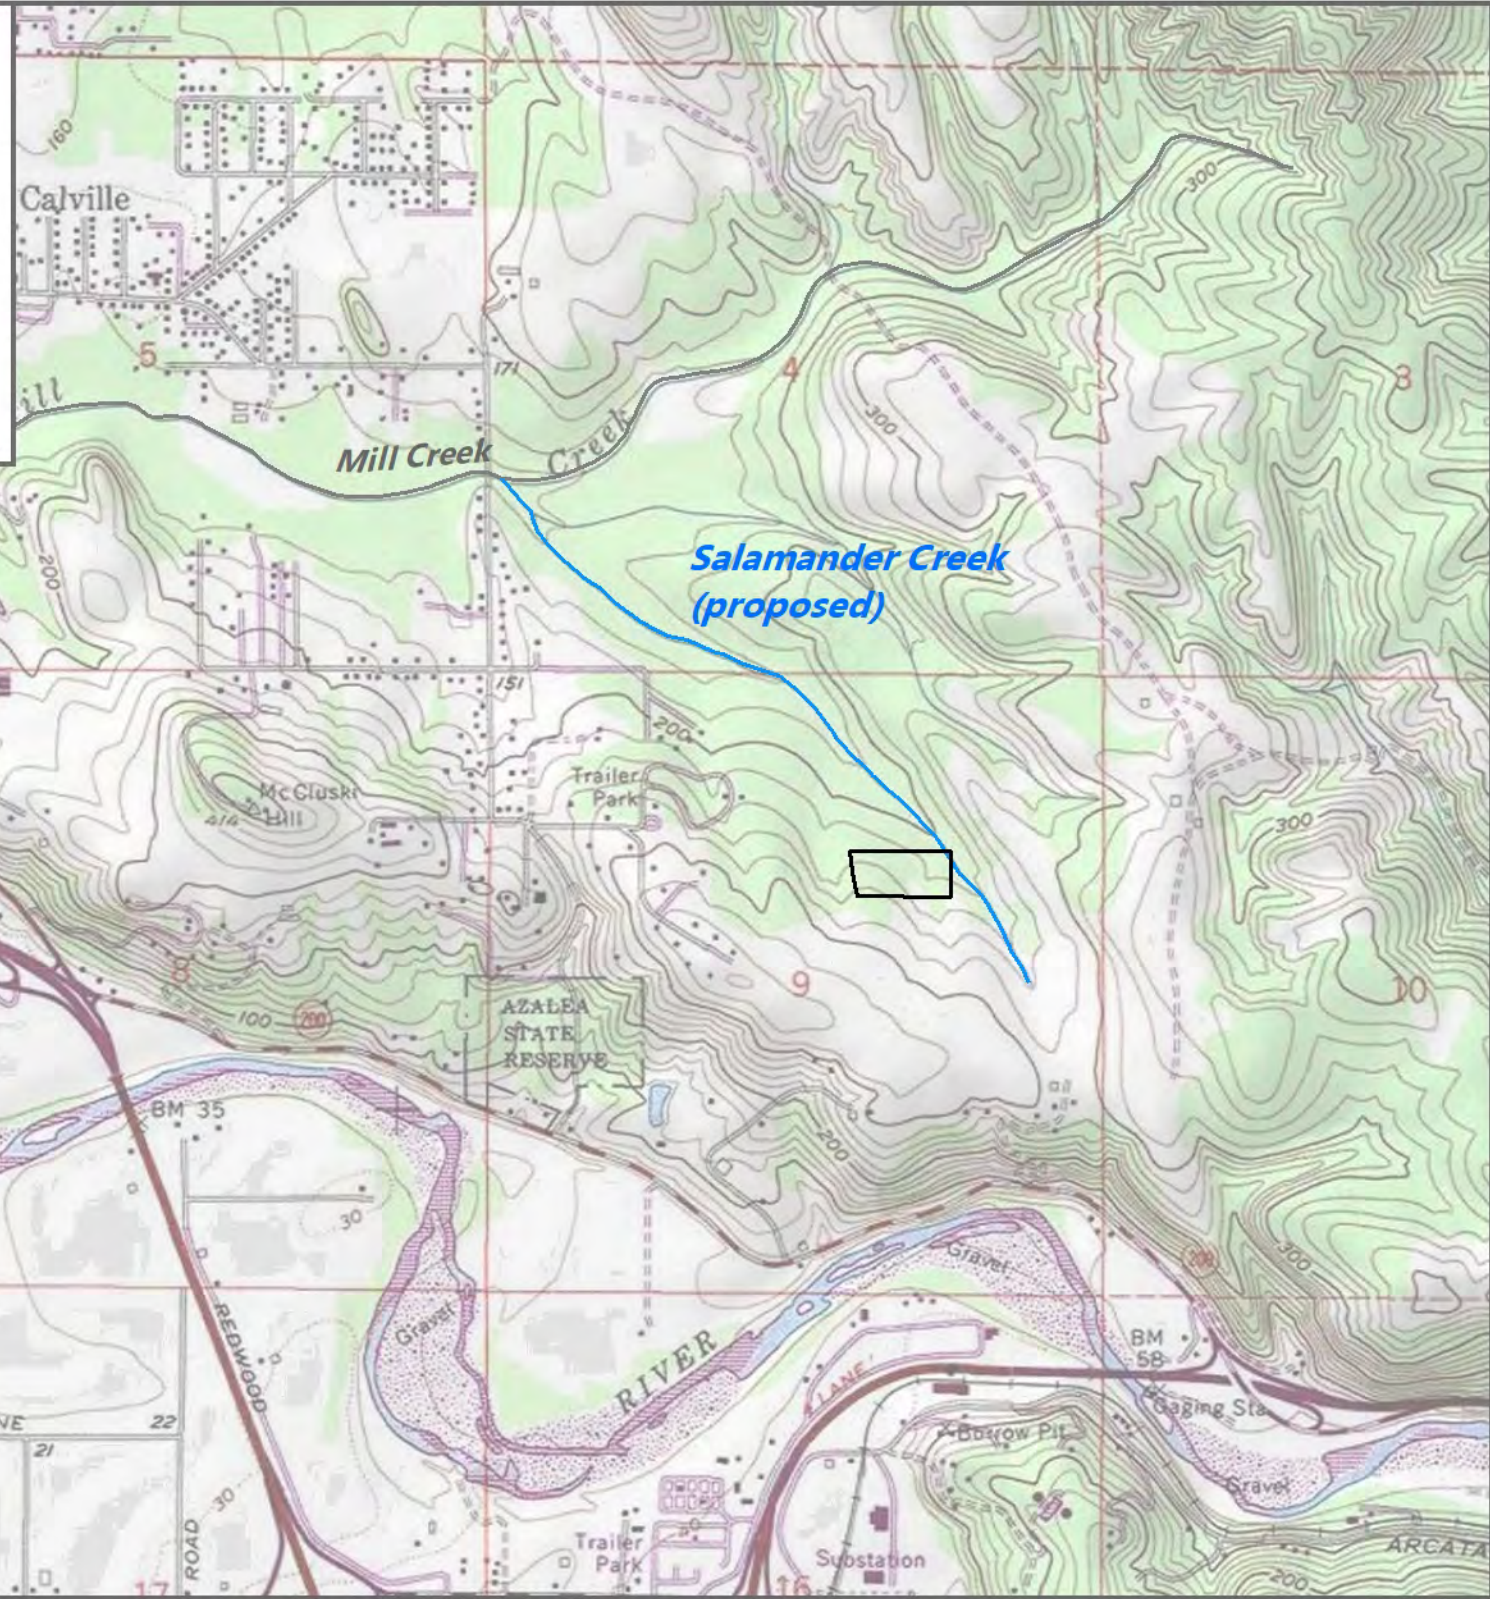

The First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States outlines clear protections to freedom of religion. We hold a deep reverence for this land and have to this date complied with full transparency and communication all deadlines for the development, implementation, and completion of all plans related to the stabilization and remediation of the land.

He indicated he is hoping to develop the site into a park, with a sculpture garden and walking paths. He stated that there was no commercial enterprise related to “Salamander Ranch.”

The Klamath River Advocate with the Environmental Protection Information Center (EPIC), which “works to protect and restore ancient forests, watersheds, coastal estuaries, and native species in Northern California,” submitted a letter of support, “provided that any tribes with ancestral ties to the land are consulted and are not in opposition.”
